HEAVY TRENCH FIGHTING.

FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT WITH AUSTRALIAN TROOPS.)

We have now passed from battle conditions to siege conditions. We have reached a point where personal valour counts for less than previous operations, and where ingenuity counts a good deal. Our positions are mainly very deep trenches protected by barbed wire entanglements, and with plenty of "traverses." At suitable points we have howitzers, 81 mm. guns, mountain guns, and a number of machine guns. When it was found that we needed machine guns badly, the machine gunners Light Horse were hurried up from Egypt. We now have the Light Horse regiments all doing dismounted work, and doing it splendidly. They were eager to come, but of course a proportion of each regiment was left to look after the horses. The battalions are stationed at certain points on guard, and sometimes after hours of silence a shot or two, or even a salvo, will startle us. Such an instance occurred two days ago. One of our battalions poured a broadside on the Turkish fort of Gabra Tepe. Some squadrons of Turkish cavalry were observed to be riding towards the fort, when the ship opened fire, and did great damage.

At night there is a constant rifle fire on both sides, swelling out into a crescendo of fury, and dying away again. Notwithstanding all this noise, often nobody would be hit. Turkish fire a few shots, then both sides went up and got at it. But occasionally our breaks out, because we have observed signs of an advance or an attempt to carry our works too near to us. We fully expected the enemy would not tolerate our present position without making a desperate attempt to dislodge us.

We threaten their line of communication and they have commenced in raking us from both flanks with shrapnel, but they have discovered that we are so well dug in that they will not shift us. They have ending "tubes" over our heads, and those many bombs have been dropped, only one man has been killed. In one assault, during the night the battle was furious—the enemy seemed to rock with the artillery fire. Every sort of gun was being used, and all sorts of projectiles were doing their deadly work. Our guns, however, must have been a surprise to the enemy, for few ones had been placed in positions, and our recently arrived howitzers, manned by marines, added the fearful roar to the tumult. From the beginning we have been wonderfully helped by the Indian mountain guns. Our men greatly admire the Indian gunners. They have nearly 100 men killed, or wounded, so that

Our machine gun sections and assaulting corps are almost intact, and their casualties are probably less than the A.M. Corps. This is not because they have been idle. Nearly every gun has been hit, some have been repaired more than once, and others are out of action. But the work is so deadly that the cleverest concealment must be practiced.

Our machine guns never come into action now unless they have a distinct target. We simply mow down the enemy in ranks when ever they can. It is impossible not to recognise the bravery of the Turks. But come on again and again. The artillery brought fearful damage among them. On the 30th, however, night, it was thought that another fierce attack was about to develop, but much to the disappointment of our men, it failed to do so. Since then there have been many negotiations which have to-day culminated in an armistice in order that both sides may bury the dead. As a result of Vahid-Sander's grand assault, the Turks had between 7000 and 8000 casualties, of which 3000 were killed. Our casualties were less than 300, and of these less than 100 were killed.

SUGAR SEIZURE.

RETAIL PRICE FIXED.

MELBOURNE, Wednesday.

The policy of the Commonwealth Government in regard to the supply of sugar was announced in the House of Representatives to-day by the Attorney-General, Mr. Hughes, who said: "The Government of the Commonwealth has made an arrangement with the Government of Queensland by which the latter Government has acquired the whole of the sugar crop for 1915, upon terms which vary but which average £18 for raw sugar, 54 per cent. net titre. The Government of the Colonies is taking the sugar over, and has made arrangements with the Colonial Sugar Company for the refining of that sugar and the distributing of it. We have made arrangements with the Governments of Argentina, the States of New South Wales and Victoria. Although I have not received replies from the other States, I have no doubt they will co-operate, and we will be able to retail the sugar throughout Australia at a maximum of 3d per lb. The usual discounts will be allowed to the manufacturers, and no others. We have taken over the C.S.R. Company's importation arriving early to arrive from Java upon terms which are satisfactory to the Government, as which are the net costs to the Government of bringing the sugar to Australia. From July 1915 we will put that sugar on the market. At the time the sugar is consumed it is estimated the new crop will be available. I am not able to speak as to the details of the arrangements between the Queensland Government and the growers of raw sugar and the millers, but as given to understand that the arrangements are quite satisfactory. In regard to the duty upon 14,250 tons of imported sugar the Government has been faced with many difficulties. Those difficulties arose, even through these importations, which are small in amount, but with the acute shortage which uncertainty arise about the end of February or the beginning of March next, at which will amount to probably anything from 80,000 to 120,000 tons. One is unable to say more nearly than this, because one does not know the exact amount of the present crop nor the date upon which the next Australian crop will be ready. The Government was confronted with the question of remitting its duty on 180,000 tons. In all the circumstances it was decided that the welfare of the community, including those engaged in the sugar industry of Queensland for these had to be considered as well as that of the rest of the community, would best be served by spreading the duty over 180,000 tons, and by remitting the duty on 180,000 tons.

Queensland sugar that will make a duty of about 12 per cent over the whole crop. The terms upon which we have acquired the sugar and the terms for refining will enable us to sell that sugar at 3d per lb. I ask the Attorney-General of New South Wales (Mr. Hall) and Victoria (Mr. Hagellthorne) and they have agreed to co-operate and fix the wholesale prices of the sugar. We will sell the sugar wholesale only on condition that it is to be retailed at 3d per lb and no more. Sugar will be the same price in Brisbane as in Perth. In regard to the New South Wales crop it is different. The Government has not taken it over, and no arrangements have been made to do so, but I am authorized to state that it is the desire of the New South Wales Government to take the crop over, if the growers so desire, in which case the Commonwealth will extend the same treatment as it has in Queensland. It will be retailed at the same price, and treated in the same way.

GERMAN BLOCKADE

HISTORICAL PARALLEL

Sir J. H. Carruthers writes:—"To get

"Now, many people believe that Germany's submarine and mine blockade is a more serious thing than it really is. In 1912 Germany was at war with France and America, and in seven months of that year American merchant ships and privateers alone captured 500 British ships—an average of 21 vessels a day; and in three years the average was maintained, so 2000 vessels were captured.

"Now, the American edition of the 'World Work' for June gives interesting statistics that show from February 14 to May 7, 1915 or thereabouts, there was a total loss of 96 ships engaged in trading to Britain, or an average

"Dreadful as the wanton and reckless waste of life and destruction of non-combatant ships may be, it is but a poor result for the British German policy, as compared to the British losses 100 years ago in open naval combat with France and America."

On the conclusion of Mr. Jensen's statement the Prime Minister (Mr. Fisher) announced that the Government had asked the Attorney-General to approach the Chief Justice, and get him to appoint a judge to inquire into the allegations, as it was considered that they struck at the very vitals of the defence question.
